

"THE DAUGHTER OF MOTHER MACHREE"

"Can money put its two strong arms about you, and shield you and protect you", asks Sally O'Brien, face to face with that world-old problem as to whether wealth or happiness is most to be performed. And most emphatically Sally decides in the negative. Happiness becomes her, for she is a child of happiness, gifted with the rare gift of Irish wit and love of laughter that ever travel hand in hand with Irish love of strife. All through "The Daughter of Mother Machree," the latest comedy by Edward E. Rose, author of "The Rosary," and other popular successes, which comes to the Lyric theatre for an engagement of two performances on Xmas afternoon and evening. This happy philosophy flows to a triumphant conclusion.

Plays may come and plays may go but plays with the abiding charm of "The Daughter of Mother Machree," have the priceless gift of immortality. There's a wealth of good comedy revealed in every line and action of captivating Sally, who is portrayed by a dainty little Miss of true Irish heritage. Sweet as the wild roses and as rarely charming, Miss Daniels succeeds in bringing to her aid the piquant appeal of the race that has ever held the name of righting hardest and loving best of all the world.

"The Daughter of Mother Machree," is no problem play but just a fascinating, simple little story of what befell a girl who is taken to Ireland to be educated by her grandfather, an earl, who disowned his son, her father. Transplanted from the famous Sally Shop where she was queen of the district, to the country home of the earl, Miss Sally has ample opportunity to reveal the true worth of her nature. Touched with the sparkle of genuine wit, she plays havoc with the carefully laid her bringing up and by so doing wins the heart of everyone who follows her story. Mother love plays a prominent part in the make-up of this strangely loyal maiden and she will brook no insult to either her mother or to the memory of her father. Few plays have been produced of the real worth of "The Daughter of Mother Machree. Seats will be on sale Monday at the box office.

FUNERAL FOR MRS. J. W. NIELSON

as a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. They spoke of her loving disposition as a child and each paid a high tribute to her as a mother, saying that she always did those things which were exemplary to her children. Services were closed by singing, "Shall We Meet Beyond the River," and the benediction was offered by Elder Harry W. Oakes. Elder N. F. Nielson and the lady's father-in-law, dedicated the grave. The floral offerings were beautiful.

OBITUARY

Mrs. Bertha R. Nielson was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Whitmore. Her mother died when she was a baby and she was raised to womanhood by Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Jensen of Hyrum. In her early girlhood days she was a faithful primary teacher. She took part in the Sunday School work as well as the Y. L. M. I. A.

On June 15, 1904, she was married to J. W. Nielson and had she lived until next June they would have spent fifteen years together as man and wife. At all times she proved to be a faithful wife and was the loving mother of seven children six of whom survive her. She contracted influenza the latter part of November and being in a weakened condition was overcome by the dreadful disease and was overtaken by death Sunday, December 15.

Her foster mother, Mrs. F. P. Jensen has left her home in Hyrum and will remain with the Nielson family of this city giving them her kindest attention. No other lady is as well qualified for this responsibility as Mrs. Jensen, as she is a lady of a congenial loving disposition, and nothing will be left undone which will aid in the comforting of the husband and children left by her daughter.

TWO SMILING FACES

"That's the reason I want to go home."

Private Barker pulled a worn leather case from his pocket and opened it to display two smiling faces that looked out trustfully at the world.

"That's my wife and that's my little baby. I haven't seen the baby yet."

"Hers my reason," spoke Private Jones and pulled out two pictures of his mother and his sweetheart.

"No wonder these French girls don't look good to you," said his buddy, looking over his shoulder. Half a dozen other cases were brought forth from the pockets of the men standing around the Red Cross canteen in France, and the talk suddenly drifted from the front and "how I went over the top" to the "folks back home." And every man who left the canteen though he had a little homesick look in his eye, looked a little more determined to clean the mess up in a hurry and get back to those two faces.

There are many thousands of men straighter because of the reminder in khaki over there and nearly every one is carrying a case with two smiling faces that look out at the world trustfully, perhaps a little
